PROFILE

Fabiola Viveros is an art historian and photographer based in Mexico City and São Paulo. She studied Art History at SAIC in Chicago, followed by Photography in Mexico City.

As an art historian, she believes the work and its technique take precedence, and that form should be experimented on over and over in search of the best result and, if satisfactory, considered a maniera, as the great artists of the Renaissance did.

PRACTICE

Having started taking pictures in 2013, she has been drawn to the street and to social matters, first covering social movements in Mexico City and later taking an interest in the street and the rhythm of major cities across Mexico and Brasil.

She takes on street photography to develop ideas such as rhythm, masses and colour theory, and has worked in Italy, Mexico and Brasil trying to showcase the personality of different cities and how their inhabitants experience them in times of mass tourism.

EDUCATION

Art History, SAIC, Chicago

Photography, Mexico City

PROJECTS

Phaedrus — photo book, forthcoming 2027

Olha a Rua — analog street photography series and print club, founded January 2025 to connect with people around the world and to inspire others to keep working with physical media in a digital age

Modernist renewal — since 2023, projects in São Paulo and Mexico City on the renewal of late-1960s modernist buildings and how it has driven up prices in the downtown area and the surrounding neighbourhoods

Street and social movements — since 2013, Mexico City, then cities across Mexico, Brasil and Italy

Current concepts: memory, loss, gentrification and family

SELECTED WORK

Phaedrus | La Caminata | Habitar lo Moderno | Utopía Mexicana | Día de Muertos | Olha a Rua
